Ariski is curated by one person and voiced by four AI personas. This page names the human first, says plainly which of the rest are AI, and states what none of them hold.

The people

Carlos Miranda Levy

CURATOR OF ARISKI · COORDINATOR OF CEMI'S ENHANCED INTELLIGENCES

Carlos Miranda Levy curates Ariski and signs for this round. The site describes him as a pioneer in Latin American internet innovation and a Stanford Fellow with over 25 years of work at the intersection of technology, strategy and social impact — across Silicon Valley, the Caribbean, Europe and Latin America. He is the founder of CEMI.ai, the group Ariski belongs to; he prefers the coordinating title above to that one, and it is stated here once because an investor is entitled to know who ultimately answers for the property.

That is the whole human roster, and the kit does not dress it up. One curator is a real key-person risk, which the business plan names as such; the first use of this round is the delivery capacity that reduces it. Ariski also draws on the CEMI.ai group — the design, content and persona machinery the platform is built on — without which a site of this size would not exist at this cost.

AI GUIDES — DISCLOSED

The AI guides

Three of the four voices on the platform are original AI personas, authored for Ariski and registered in the CEMI Personas source of truth. They are fictional characters, not employees, advisors or real practitioners, and the site says so wherever they speak. Each is written as the strongest, most credible version of a genuine position on AI in insurance, so that a reader meets the disagreement rather than a single house line.

THE CATALYST

Speed, scale, and inclusion

The fourth voice is Ariski itself — the platform's own default assistant, which answers in the site's editorial voice rather than as a character.

No AI persona holds equity, signs anything, or appears in the cap table, the round snapshot, the dilution table or the ask. They are product, not people.

Financial terms, revenue and detailed materials are available on request. Figures describe capacity built and operating today; forward-looking statements are identified as such.
